The editorial team of the oldest still-existing broadcast in German televisio

The editorial team of the oldest still-existing broadcast in German television - the "Tagesschau" , has decided to significantly improve the quality of its reporting due to growing pressure from its viewers (including declining viewer ratings). New motto: More truth, less fake news, and now and then also a positive report - "no matter what"!

The editorial team of the oldest still-existing broadcast in German television - the "Tagesschau" , has decided to significantly improve the quality of its reporting due to growing pressure from its viewers (including declining viewer ratings). New motto: More truth, less fake news, and now and then also a positive report - "no matter what"!

The broadcaster has now achieved a first successful step with its blunt announcement: "Rain can sometimes lead to soil saturation."

We congratulate you on your courageous turnaround, from corporate distance back to civic proximity and we commend the nonconformist, candid public relations work of the Helmholtz Centre for Environmental Research in Leipzig!

It's good.
to be truu.