Who would have both the motive and the power to obscure the connections

Who would have both the motive and the power to obscure the connections between effective mineral sources and the effects of the purest possible water for humanity across generations? There are very simple, plausible explanations...

Who would have both the motive and the power to obscure the connections between effective mineral sources and the effects of the purest possible water for humanity across generations?

There are very simple, plausible explanations for why the knowledge cited in the truu info channel of so many independent nutritional scientists, doctors and experts about the remarkable function of the purest possible water for humanity will probably never be communicated by the two largest and loudest voices in the country (water management and environmental agencies and the mineral water industry). For generations, the majority of people have thought about water "simply what" these institutions prescribe.

Employees of treatment and water plants typically do their best to deliver clean water to households using the technology available to them. However, there is no public water treatment plant nationwide in Germany that would be capable of pumping water without residues of medications, hormones, microplastics, industrial chemicals, PFAS etc. into public pipes.

The construction of such a water treatment plant would be technically possible, but too expensive. Furthermore, Germany has no pipelines available for transporting highly pure water. The dissolving power of the purest water would only deliver a dark broth, because all deposits from the pipes would be dissolved and flushed into households.

If someone were to stand in a village square preaching the virtues of the purest water, success would not only scratch the pride of every government regarding its most important supply system for its population - at the same time, such a preacher would also undermine the creed of the leading industry of all beverage manufacturers. Someone could thus perceive such a preacher as a kind of rebel or troublemaker.

Because instead of removing "ingredients" with powerful filter systems, the industry brazenly advertises these contents by speaking of "more valuable water." Economically, the calculation works out profitably: mineral water is the favorite beverage of Germans and generates manufacturers over 3 billion euros in sales per year.

It's good.
to be truu.